Leopold Delisle, Director-General of the National Library in France, for all knowledge of them in this country. Their importance for the illustration of English history, from the Conquest to the reign of Henry VIII., their value as evidence on many controverted questions, and for the elucidation of ambiguous points in history, is unquestionable, and as much too important to be overlooked, as their investigation is to be deferred to a distant future. To quote only a few instances of their value proved by recent investigation. The two first documents named on the list are the original confirmation-charter of St. Pancras, and the Inspeximus or attested copy of Earl Warenne s second foundation-charter of that Cluniac priory.
