The colors and contours of all that golden region had been etched and blazoned upon the child soul of Felise. That one sharp peak, spiritual with distance, veiled in leagues of shadowless light, towering faint and blue from some deeper, greenes valley, she had peopled with dreams; from her casement she had seen it near and black against the silent, purple dawn. Behind it, thought the child, walks God. It was the peak of Ixmiquilpan. The regiment came in sight of Cazadero across the uplands--a castle embowered; orchards; an aqueduct hiding in vines; long stables, rubblewalled, red-roofed; a village; a chapel yellow as gold. The princely hacienda lay back from the road, to be approached by its own road, poplarlined. Have you selected camp The voice of Dubois roused Roderick from revery. Not yet, sir, he said. Shall we see General Medina first I wonder that he has not sent some one to meet us. Lets ride on and see. The village poured forth a crowd to see the regiment. Most of the men were soon going to be soldiers themselves. From the south, on a rancheros fagged horse, came a single hussar. He came up and saluted. Whats the trouble, my man asked the colonel. Sir, General Medina and his family were captured yesterday afternoon at El Puerto. His family! exclaimed Taliaferro. The hussar went on with his report. Three oclock! interrupted Taliaferro. Yesterday afternoon! Where have you been,...
