Brand New Book ***** Print on Demand *****.The book Fighting Women is a tales of a teen-aged girl Uma, searching madly for her own parents who were arrested and jailed by police on charge of terrorism at her six months old. She was raised by Sam Roy, a widower (70) as his grand-daughter. It is a new kind of love story too between a young (teenage) lady Uma and an older widowed man, Sam. While telling stories of other women of various religious sects being tortured through fatwa of clerics and sexually abused by the males from father to office bosses. He also told how all those victimised women unitedly protested and eradicated terrorism from our world for peace and love. The reason, human being, particularly, women first expect love, peace and a secured shelter. He became much embarrassed when Uma came to know that she was a daughter of a Pakistani terrorist father and mother of Indian origin. She was terribly shocked and wept silently. Incidentally, she joined and was posted as police officer in Indian Jammu Kashmir. She vowed to search her parents and ultimately got them. But was it possible for her to accept them? A confusion between duty to her mother land India and emotional sentiment fixed her to decide. He narrated to his grand-daughter, how oppression, torture, endless injustice etc. by religious clerics anti-progressive fatwa on women made their lives hell under the coverage of religious code of conduct and taboo. He described beautifully how those suffered women organised a non-violent movement against those religious leaders who were indulging in killing innocent peace-loving people, particularly women, children for their own interest in the name of religion. He detailed...
