Recognizing the importance of mental arithmetic as a disciplinary study, and realizing the fact that when properly taught it adds keenness to the mind, develops a habit of concentration and attains another end of equal importance--the development of the reasoning faculty--a course in mental arithmetic is given during the second and fourth quarters of the year. PROFESSIONAL ARITHMETIC. A teacher should have a clear Conception of the fact that the entire subject of arithmetic depends upon the application of a few simple principles. The study should proceed from experience and should be related to objects and the affairs of life as much as is reasonable and practicable. The child should have that facility in the use of numbers which enables him to sink the calculation into automatic fashion. With these ends in view, each topic...
